Autobiography:

For many years I have been involved with NGO groups engaged in the advocacy for youth rights and is committed to the research and supervision on the influence of governmental acts and policies and resource distribution have on the diversified development and basic rights of the young generation. Examples include: protection of labor interests of disadvantaged teens, media access and media self-regulation, cultural recreation right, right to equal access to education, and social participation rights. I promoted and pushed for the revision of the “Children and Youths Welfare and Rights Act “and set “The Act of the Cooperative Education Implementation in Senior High Schools and the Protection of Student Participants’ Right.” Recently, I have been paying special attention to the promotion of civil rights of eighteen year olds and is set to initiate campaigns with civil groups for the amendment of the Constitution to lower the voting age.
